HERE COMES

The number of criminal incidents involving Pokémon has been on the rise. Some suggest it may have something to do with the rash of Pokémon kidnappings that have been occurring recently.

Pokémon breeders believe that to properly raise and evolve a Pokémon, you have to treat it with love and attention. But what happens if a Pokémon isn't treated properly? Will it evolve differently? What's the secret behind this new threat to Pokémon and their trainers? To see what happens when a Pokémon turns bad, check out the new Team Rocket cards.

Missing Cards

I have just bought your magazine and seen on page 30 of issue 9, some cards that I would like to complete my collection. I would like to buy some of these and would like to know if it is possible to buy any of them.

Aaron Burke, 14 yrs

The magazine is a guide for Pokémon fans only. We do not sell individual cards. We have had many letters from parents and children requesting individual cards they wish to buy. We only sell the products listed on our advertising pages; the only cards we sell are in the starter and pre-constructed decks. There are many sites on the web that offer fans the opportunity to buy and sell individual cards, and also if you join a Pokémon league, there is more opportunity to swap, buy or sell your cards.

Missing Page

I am writing to inform you about a problem I encountered in issue 3 of your magazine. As I walked into my local newsagents and saw your magazine I couldn't wait to buy it, because I really like Pokémon and I wanted to read about the trading cards (which I collect). As I flicked through the book I started to read 'Air Mail'. It was really good, and when I got to Bobby Wadell's letter I was really excited because it said there was a checklist and a price guide on page 33. As I looked for the page I turned to the back of the book; the last page number was 31 and there were no more pages after it. I was really upset because I wanted to know how much my cards cost.

David Ker, 10yrs
Middlesex

Beckett Pokémon Collector apologises for any distress this error has caused. The reason is that we wanted to be sure that the prices we were printing were correct and so the Price Guide that was due to go into issue 3 was delayed until issue 7. Every issue has a price guide in it now, running from pages 18 to 25. It is in two parts, so you'll get the whole picture if you buy two consecutive issues. This issue for example, has part one, and part two will follow in issue 15. The fact that the 'Air Mail' reply mentioned a page that doesn't exist was purely a typographical error and should have been removed when we decided to delay the price guide. Our price guide is now the most reliable source for current Pokémon merchandise prices.

Who is Mariru?

I've seen pictures of a creature I believe is Mariru, but my friend says it's called Pikablu. Who or what is it?

Oscar Pendleton, 9 yrs

Mariru is the Japanese name for Marril #183. When Marril was first spotted on a Pokémon card, collectors thought it looked like Pikachu and started calling it Pikablu.

LET THE BATTLE BEGIN!

How to win BIG at Pokémon Stadium

by Jason R. Rich

Now that you've helped Ash find, collect and train all 151 types of Pokémon when you experienced Pokémon Red, Blue and/or Yellow on the Game Boy, it's finally possible to see all of your favorite Pokémon characters in full-color and in 3-D when you play Pokémon Stadium on the N64.

Any or all of the Pokémon you trained on the Game Boy (including their specialty moves, level, HMs, and TMs) can be transferred to the N64 using the Transfer Pak which comes with the Pokémon Stadium game.

While Pokémon Stadium doesn't have a storyline, this is a Pokémon battle game for between one and four players. When you experience the Stadium mode, for example, you can participate in the Poké Cup, Prime Cup, Pika Cup or Petit Cup. Sorry, but Mew can only participate in Prime Cup battles. In this one player mode, you can enter up to six of your favorite Pokémon, but only choose three of them per battle. By winning each battle in the tournament, you'll win that Cup.

TIP: When transferring Pokémon between the Game Boy and N64, keep in mind that once you move a Pokémon to the N64, it will be erased from your Game Boy cart. If you want that Pokémon back in your Game Boy, you'll need to transfer it back.

STRATEGY: During a Pokémon battle, you can run, change Pokémon or battle, just like when playing the Game Boy adventure. If you choose to fight, use the right trigger on the controller to see that Pokémon's available moves and the yellow buttons on the controller to choose the move you want to execute during your turn.

TIP: When two Pokémon are engaged in battle, the Pokémon who is rated with the greatest Speed is the one who gets to launch its attack first. Each battle continues until you either Run or cause all of your opponent's Pokémon to faint.

STRATEGY: There are several different types of Pokémon (Normal, Fire, Water, Electric, Grass, Ice, Flying, Rock, Bug, Ghost, etc.). As a Pokémon trainer, it's your job to determine your Pokémon's strengths and weaknesses based upon its type. Likewise, if you know your opponent's weaknesses, you'll be able to exploit them with your Pokémon's strengths. For example, a Fighting-type Pokémon will be extra powerful against Normal, Ice and Rock type Pokémon. Also, Water-type Pokémon are particularly powerful against Fire, Rock and Ground type Pokémon. During each match, choose a Pokémon whose type you know is superior to your opponent, and make sure your Pokémon is ranked at a higher level. This virtually guarantees victory.

TIP: To create the strongest and most powerful Pokémon, catch'em early when playing Pokémon Red, Blue or Yellow (when their levels are very low). Spend time building up each Pokémon's level over time, then transfer it to the N64.

TIP: When choosing which six Pokémon to include on your team, make sure you select many types of Pokémon capable of performing different attacks. Try to avoid too much overlap. This will help you prepare to face any opponent. Just before a match begins, you'll see your opponent's Pokémon line-up and be able to compare it to yours.

STRATEGY: If you're fortunate enough to launch a first attack in a battle, use one of your fastest and strongest Pokémon, so you can weaken your opponent quickly. If you're battling a Pokémon you know is stronger or faster than yours, try using Hypnosis or a Confuse Ray, for example, to slow down the more powerful Pokémon.

Strategy: When your favorite Pokémon are still stored on your Game Boy, you can give'em a major power boost by feeding them Calcium, Carbos, HP Ups, Protein, Iron and other special items before transferring them to the N64. The Department Store within Celadon City is a great place to stock up on these power-up items. If you need extra cash, earn it by battling the Elite Four several times at the end of your Game Boy adventure.

TIP: After you've registered all 151 types of Pokémon in the Hall of Fame when playing Pokémon Stadium, your reward will be access to a very special Pokémon, called Amnesia Psyduck.

STRATEGY: If you have a Pokémon who has become very weak from battle, yet you still have to defeat several strong opposing Pokémon, consider having your weak Pokémon perform an explosion or self-destruct move (if available). While your Pokémon will faint as a result of using it, your stronger opponent will most likely faint as well.

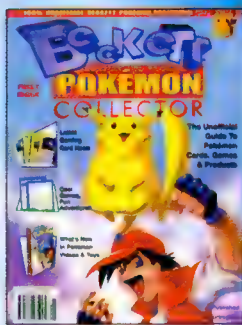

STRATEGY: To reveal the secret tournament against Mewtwo in the Stadium mode, you'll need to first win all ten trophies in this mode. This will cause the VS Mewtwo tournament option to show up on the map screen. In this battle mode, you can choose six (not three) of your most powerful Pokémon. Bug-type Pokémon or your own Mewtwo will work well. After beating Mewtwo, let the game credits roll, but pay close attention to the screen. You'll gain access to yet another secret game mode - the R-2 Bonus Mode.

TRAINERS RULE!

By STEVEN DIAMOND

UTILIZE YOUR TRAINER CARDS TO THEIR FULL CAPACITY.

Let's say it's Monday and you have a spelling test on Friday. By studying each night you'll prepare yourself for a good score. And many of you receive an allowance after you finish your chores and homework. Discipline can reap big rewards. Apply this when building Pokémon decks. Personally, I study tournament-winning decks before building my own.

GO TRAINERS, GO!

Experienced Pokémon players say that Trainers can win the game. But many beginners neglect to include enough Trainers, or they put in the wrong combination. Between the Base, Jungle and Fossil sets there are 32 Trainers available.

I analyzed 55 "killer decks" (verified tournament winners) to discover what Trainers are being used in tournaments. I tallied how often the top 15 appeared.

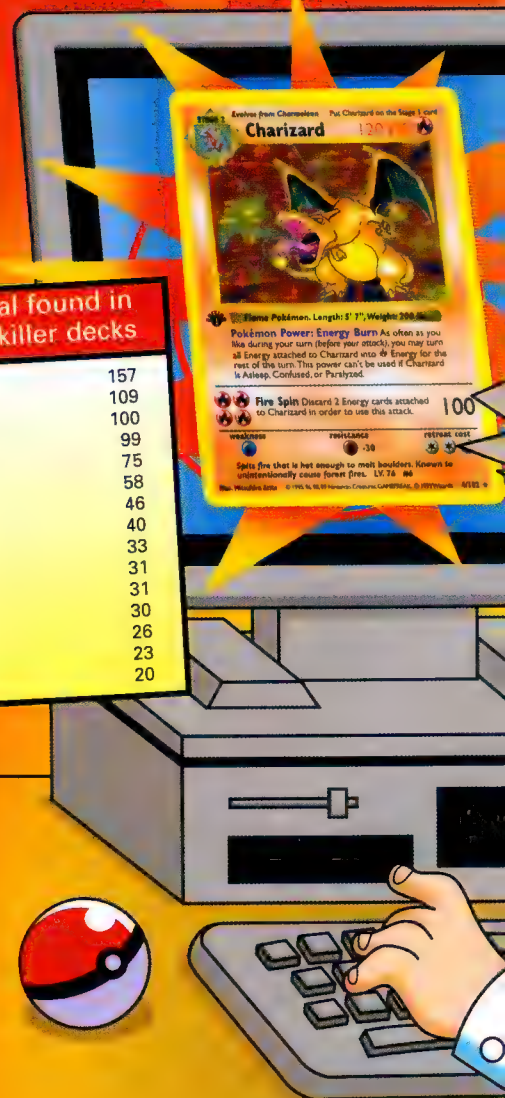

I divided them into five groups by their predominant use or effect. Let's examine Card Drawing Power and Disruption!

CARD DRAWING POWER

Bill is a welcome draw. "Draw two cards" is like taking your next two turns early at no cost. Bill allows you to have more cards than your opponent. Use him to find Pokémon or Energy cards quickly. Include at least two or three.

Grab a Professor Oak to get through your deck faster. He lets you draw seven cards from your deck once you've discarded the rest of your hand. Empty your hand of useful cards, then play Professor Oak. You don't need to have any cards in your hand to discard.

If the professor's used too often you'll run out of cards, decking yourself and losing the game. Bill and the professor are crucial in speed or turbo decks, which depend on evolutions and Energy. Use two or three.

Use Computer Search to find the card you want. Despite the cost of two discards, nothing is better at finding a second stage evolution or game-winning Trainer. This card's so good it's banned in Japanese tournaments! Use one or two.

Energy Retrieval lets you rummage through your discard pile for a Basic Energy card. Avoid Double Colorless. Then trade for any card in your hand. This is useful toward the end of the game when many Energy cards are in your discard pile. Place one or two Energy Retrievals in each deck.

Another way to find the right Pokémon for the job is to use Pokémon Trader to trade any Basic or evolution Pokémon from your hand for one from your deck. The Trader is another key card in turbo and evolution-dependent decks. Use one or two.

Would you like to evolve Squirtle directly to Blastoise or Charmander to Charizard by your second turn? Pokémon Breeder lets you put a Stage 2 evolution from your hand on its matching Basic card. Pokémon Breeder can only be played when you would normally be allowed to evolve. And your Basic Pokémon must have played during your previous turn. Use two to three in a turbo deck.

Many killer decks contain one or two Item Finders. You could win the game with its ability to retrieve a Trainer card from your discard pile. Get a Gust of Wind, force your opponent to make a weak Pokémon his or her Active Pokémon, then knock it out for a prize. Use one to two.

If you flip heads, the Poké Ball lets you search for a Basic or evolution card. It's a favorite with younger players, but few killer decks have one. Like the Poké Ball, younger players use the Pokédex more often.

Energy Search lets you grab any Basic Energy, except Double Colorless, from your deck. It's great for powering up your Pokémon.

The last four Trainers haven't appeared in any winning decks, but they're worth looking into.

Revive might be useful if you didn't have to put damage counters on the revived Pokémon equal to half its HP. Fossil's Gambler also depends on fate. A lucky coin toss can help if you're close to decking yourself, but Gambler's usefulness is situational. Flip heads with Recycle to retrieve a card from your discard pile. Maintenance can be used as an "anti-decking" device in stall decks. Many people dislike these decks, so avoid building one.

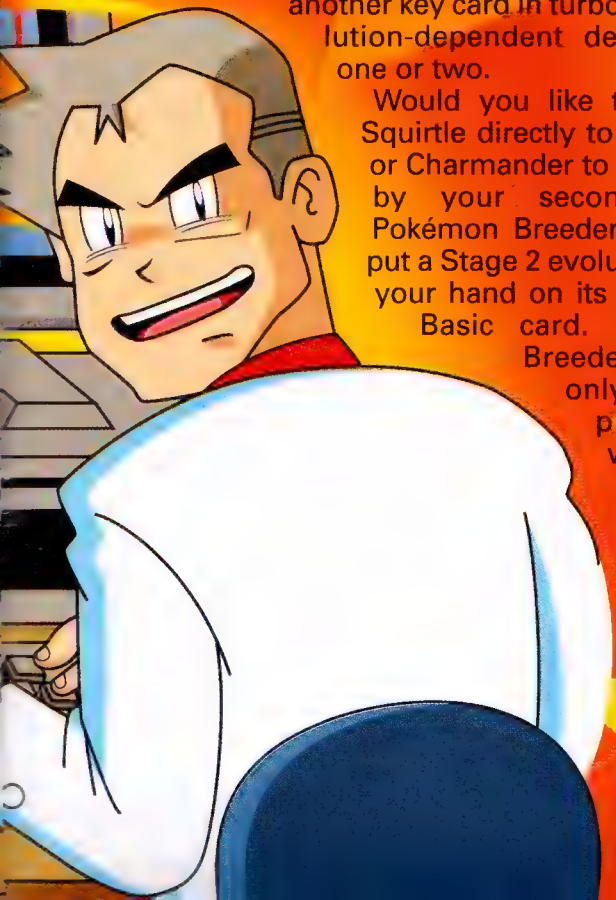

DISRUPTION!

The most powerful Trainer is Energy Removal with over 150 appearing in 55 decks. This card is disruptive and defensive. Reduced Energy can leave your opponent's Active Pokémon unable to attack. It's effective when used to strip away a Double Colorless Energy. Use three to four.

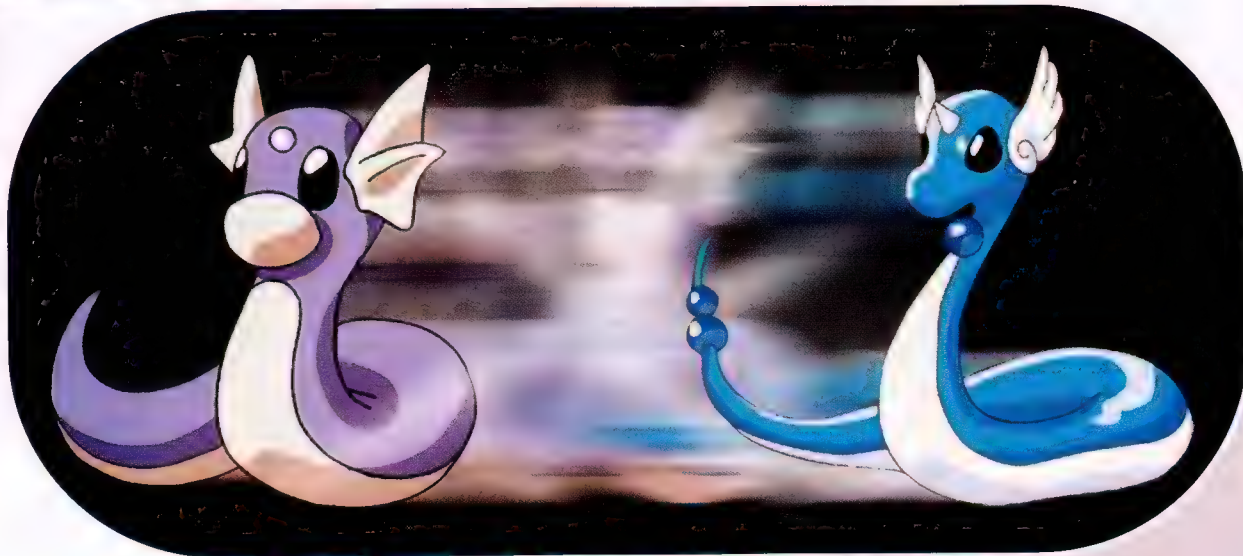

Super Energy Removal disrupts your opponent's game plan, negates two of his or her turns playing Energy cards and is a great defensive move. This is another Trainer banned from Japanese tournaments. Use two to four in each deck.

Impostor Professor Oak and Lass are rarely used. I've used Impostor Professor after my opponent used a Professor Oak to restock his or her hand. He's a mind gamer and fun for effect. Lass also has a disruptive attack. It's useful when it's the only card left and you don't have any Trainers to lose.

The Secrets of Evolution

ne of the secrets all great Pokémon players know is that Colorless Pokémon are valuable additions to just about any deck. Why? First of all, Colorless Pokémon can use any type of Energy to power up their attacks. Second, all Colorless Pokémon have resistance either to fighting or psychic attacks, making them good defensive allies when you run into those type Pokémon. Finally, no Pokémon has resistance to Colorless type attacks. For example, when a Persian Pounces it does 30 damage, period. By the same token, no Pokémon has weakness to Colorless attacks, so you never get the thrill of seeing your attacks double their damage.

There Be Dragons Here!

One of the strongest Colorless evolutions begins with a rather weak Dragon Pokémon, Dratini. With only 40 HP, Dratini is a sitting duck if that's all you find in your opening draw. Dratini's single attack, Pound, is worth 10 damage and is reasonable trade for one Energy of any color. But you'll want to evolve the little dragon to its first stage evolution as soon as possible.

Dragonair is a big leap into serious Pokémon playing. Delicate Dratini immediately gains strength to become an 80 HP monster. Dragonair's Slam attack requires three Energies and gives you the chance of inflicting 60 damage if you're lucky enough to flip two coins and get two heads. Otherwise, the attack is worth zero. Dragonair's second attack, Hyper Beam, is really sweet. Although it only causes 20 damage (for a whopping 4 Energies!), it also allows you to choose one Energy card attached to the defending Pokémon and discard it. It's like playing an Energy Removal each time you attack. It's a very disruptive attack, and a favorite part of my wife Mary's strategy -very effective!

With the Fossil set, Dragonair achieved its highest evolution, Dragonite. One of the "walk-on" stars of Pokémon: the First Movie, Dragonite enjoys a solid 100 HP and increases the potential of Slam to 80 damage. Dragonite's Pokémon Power, Step In, allows you to promote Dragonite as your Active Pokémon once during your turn for zero retreat cost. All in all, the family of Dragons can be quite a threat.

Magical Monsters

The Fairy family, Clefairy and Clefable, look like cute little marshmallows, but looks can be deceiving. Like Dratini, Clefairy is weak with only 40 HP to protect itself. No one plays Clefairy for its first attack, Sing, which requires a coin toss of heads to put the defending Pokémon asleep. Clefairy's real strength lies in Metronome, its second attack. For 3 Energies you get to choose one of the defending Pokémon's attacks and copy it without paying the Energy costs or discarding Energies required for the copied attack. For example, when Clefairy copies Charizard's Fire Spin attack, it doesn't have to discard two Energy cards to use it.

Clefairy's evolution to Clefable (with a stronger 70 HP) allows the Fairy Pokémon to power up Metronome for only one Energy. Clefable's second attack, Minimize, is purely defensive, reducing any attacks on Clefable by 20. It's not much to get excited about. Metronome is the real goods. Remember that no matter what Energy type your Fairies are copying for their attacks, Metronome attacks are always counted as Colorless attacks. You cannot take advantage of the defending Pokémon's weakness.

Cool Cats

Overcome your distrust of Meowth, even if it's a naughty member of TV's Team Rocket. Meowth's only attack is Pay Day. For two Energies the cat causes 10 damage plus the possibility of drawing a card from your deck if you get heads on a coin toss. With 50 HP this Scratch Cat Pokémon has a fair chance to survive to its first stage evolution.

Meowth's evolution to Persian gives it a touch of class and a decent pair of attacks. Persian's Scratch attack (2 Energies) causes 20 damage. Attach a third Energy to your Classy Cat Pokémon and its Pounce attack does 30 damage and reduces any attack on Persian during the next turn by 10 damage, a good combination of offense and defense.

Colorless Soloists

Tauros, the 60 HP Wild Bull Pokémon, is one tough-looking beast with attacks to match. Stomp does at least 20 damage for two Energies and an additional 10 damage with a coin toss of heads. Tauros' second attack, Rampage, will make your opponent stop and do a little math before attacking. This attack does 20 damage plus another 10 damage for each damage counter on Tauros. Since the Wild Bull can hold 50 damage without getting knocked out, Rampage has the potential for doing 70 damage. Your best strategy is to use Scoop Up on Tauros as soon as possible to save your pet bull!

What can you say about a Pokémon that does absolutely nothing but eat and sleep? Snorlax is big in every way. The Sleeping Pokémon has 90 HP (very good), but requires 4 Energies to retreat (very bad). Its only attack, Body Slam, produces a measly 30 damage for a whopping 4 Energies with a possibility of Paralyzing the defending Pokémon with a coin toss of heads. Even with its Thick Skinned Pokémon Power preventing it from becoming Asleep, Confused or Paralyzed, Snorlax isn't the most effective member of your team.

Last, and definitely least, comes poor little Porygon. I just can't imagine what use anybody has for this Virtual Pokémon. I recently saw it appear in a deck at the Pokémon League where it was included simply as a joke. We'll have to wait until the Team Rocket Porygon is released. At least that Porygon has an attack that causes some damage! Until then, Porygon stays on its virtual Bench.

Dangerous dragons, fluffy fairies, cool cats and quirky characters - Pokémon's Colorless critters are actually a colorful lot!
